

OUTER SPACE INVADERS

It was super late that summer night
When a curious lad had a strange fright
Heat had left him without benefit of sleep;
What he saw that evening, he'll always keep
In his memory for many years yet to come.
This story was no tall tale that he'd spun.

Staring toward one incredibly bright star
He observed a space craft shaped like a jars
slowly descending to land
In a huge pit of sand,
Sounding no louder than a mouse.
Not far from his neat, cozy house.
No adult would believe the statements he made
It appeared that this ship had never stayed;
In truth it could not be found,
Well hidden, it was, deep under ground.

Immediately, our "visitors" were up to no good
Sending Martian patrols into the nearby wood capturing earthlings for an experimental plan;
The formation of an Army to conquer our land.
Victorious Martians would then set the rules
Humans would be nothing more than mere tools.
Everyone knew this idea was just wrong
Our leaders swore to defeat this great throng
Of innocent minds so callously seized
By heinous Martians who just did as they pleased.

The battle it seemed
Was tougher than dreamed
Enemy troops proved hard to discern
Until their vile secrets, we did learn.
Now we were able to easily ferrite out
An innocent citizen from an automaton lout.

--The struggle turned to good's favor ----
Martian losses mounted - despite their great labor.
Our attack of the Aliens' base was now planned;
Smart Martians however could not be scammed
These cruel masters
Desired no disasters.
Knowing their evil efforts were spent
Invaders folded their interspace tent.
Off they flew to their far away home
Without so much as a single moan
Declaring to anxious superiors
No desire to be with Earths' inferiors.
